

MAGMAGATOR

MALL WORLD MELTDOWN

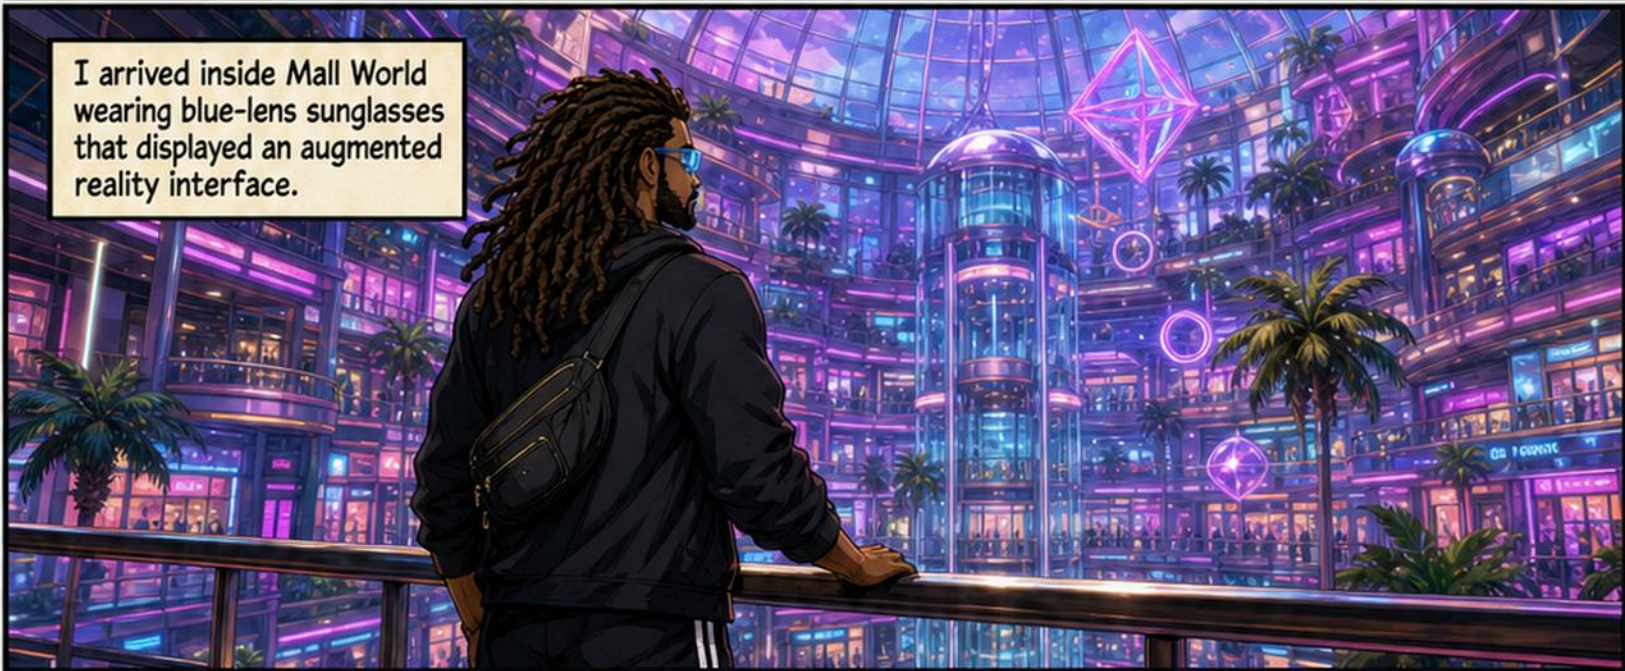

JULY 17, 2026

I induced lucidity through sleep paralysis and entered the Storyverse alone.

I arrived inside Mall World wearing blue-lens sunglasses that displayed an augmented reality interface.

I materialized a handheld touchpad, giving me precise mouse control over everything the glasses displayed.

Then I needed a bathroom, so I followed the directory into a nearby corridor.

The moment I entered the bathroom, my lucidity slipped away.

Filthy sinks, broken stalls, and flickering lights repeated farther than I could see.

It looked exactly like the infinite bathrooms people describe in dreams of Mall World.

I had visited Mall World before, but without lucidity I could not clearly understand where I was.

While I felt powerless and confused, something impossible began rising through the floor.

An alligator emerged from the floor and began growing beyond every reasonable limit.

Its scales became volcanic stone, and rivers of magma burned through its enormous body.

That impossible leap in dream logic made me realize I was dreaming, restoring my lucidity all at once.

I stopped feeling powerless as a yellow-and-blue superhero suit materialized around my body.

I flew straight at the monster I immediately understood as Magmagator.

I attacked with flight, strength, and lucid energy, expecting my new power to be enough.

Magmagator absorbed my strongest strike and knocked me across the atrium.

Its molten breath and crushing tail proved that I could not handle the kaiju alone.

Then a purple-skinned stranger in red and black crashed into Mall World and freed me.

I had never met them, but I immediately knew the stranger was my evil twin.

I did not understand the twin's motive, but there was no time to refuse their help.

My twin restrained Magmagator's jaws while I stopped its tail from destroying more of the mall.

We moved with the same instincts, each power covering the weakness in the other's attack.

Our combined energy overwhelmed the monster where neither of us could have succeeded alone.

Magmagator's molten body cooled into silent black stone, and Mall World was safe.

After the fight,
I asked: "Why would my evil twin come here to save me?"

My twin explained that we came from an alien planet and had both been sent to Earth with extraordinary powers.

Our mission was to fight monsters created from the dystopian pollutants of Earth's future.

They answered: "I am not truly evil. I simply do not care about Earth, because Earth is not our home."

We went separate ways.
I stayed to investigate the polluting companies and the resistance trying to stop them.

A woman from the resistance found me while I searched for information about the polluting companies.

She had long curly black hair, light-brown skin, and a light-brown dress, and she was clearly attracted to my power.

She was pretty, but she was not necessarily my type.

Her approach became very aggressive, and I leaned away as the dream began breaking apart.

My alarm went off, and I woke before I could learn anything more about the resistance.

