

THE DOORMAN OF THE LAVA SKY

AUGUST 24, 2026

I stepped from a dimensional
elevator beside Autumn, a woman
who insisted
she was my wife.

She remembered
our adventures
together. I remembered
neither her nor my life as the Doorman.

Outside waited
a desert of
black-bone
castles beneath
a sky sealed by living lava.

Autumn summoned
Apollo, who said
Meltronomie's lava
had imprisoned
the world without sunlight.

He charged
us to defeat
the lava god
and reopen
the sky.

After naming
me the dimensional
elevator's Doorman, Autumn vanished—and I continued alone.

A giant black-bone dinosaur tried to swallow me, but its hollow ribs became my cockpit.

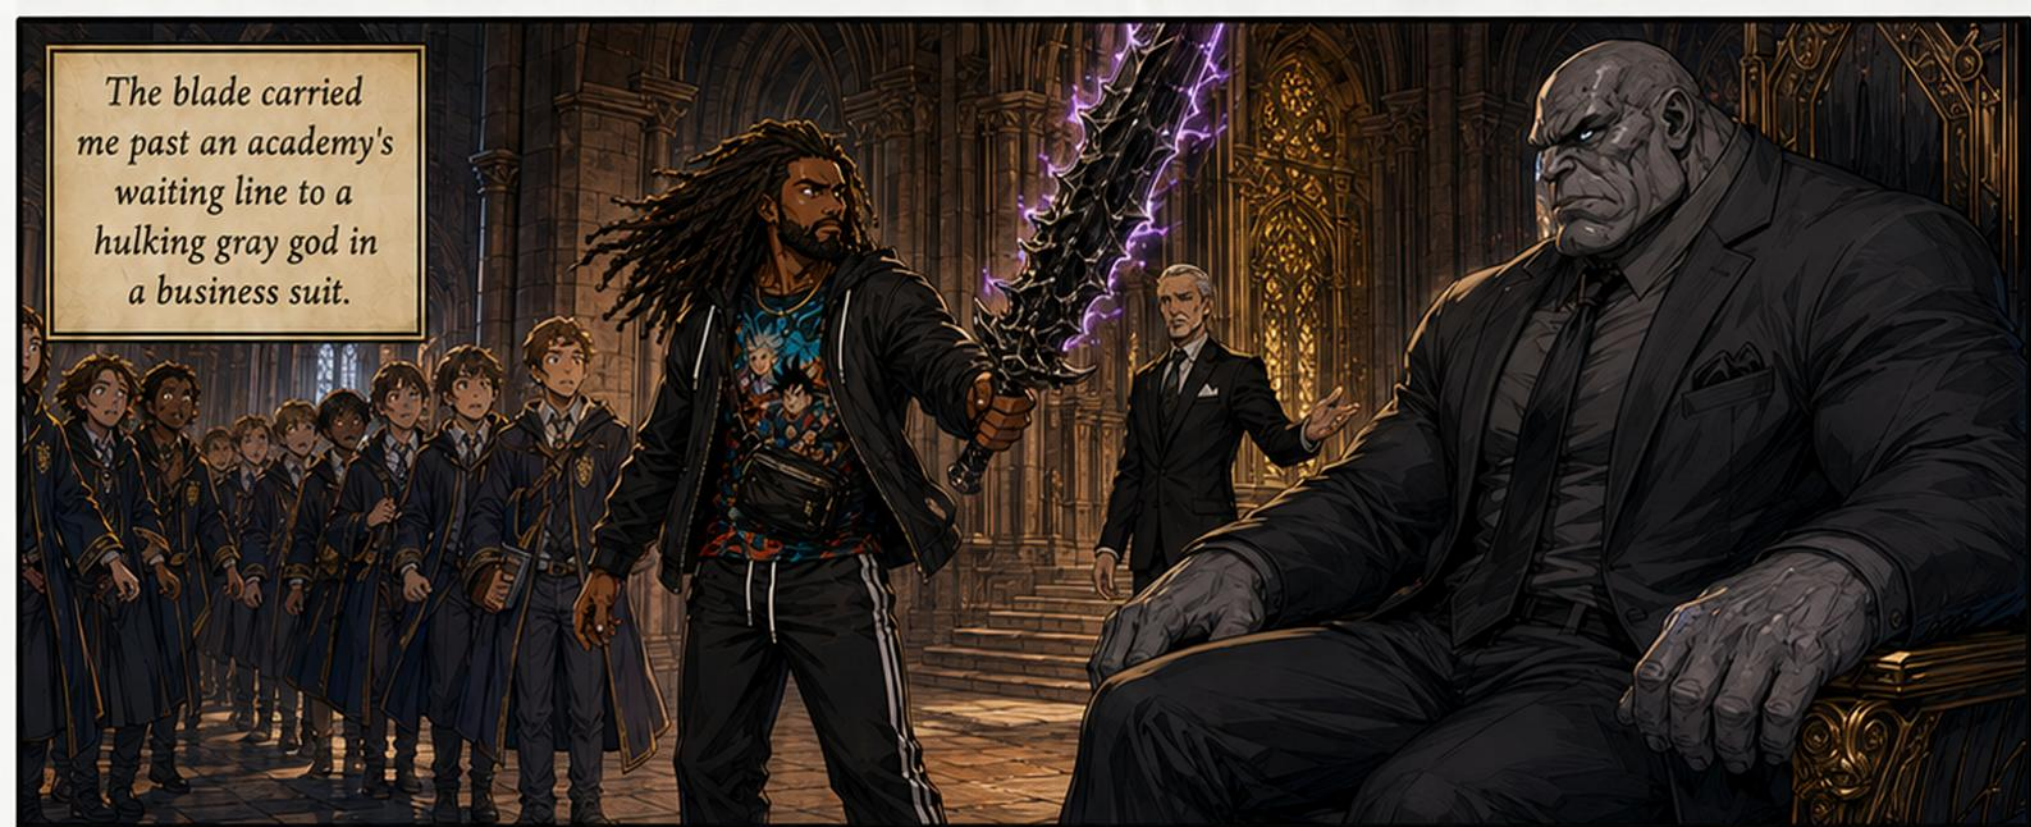

Lucid Light formed controls, letting me pilot the skeleton like a mech.

The god of blades gave me safe passage—and a divine bone blade—when Meltronome's fall promised him greater rank.

The blade carried
me past an academy's waiting line to a
hulking gray god in a business suit.

The god of deals
transferred his unlimited but conditional magic
into me.

As the bargain's price, he stole another student's power and transformed
into a lightning
rhinoceros.

I understood
his escape: he
traded vulnerable
godhood for direct combat
power.

Yet the new
rhinoceros terrified
everyone he had left
inside the academy.

I cast Porta,
sending his legs
into the desert while his harmless upper body remained
behind.

The deal god's magic had
required bargains
and sacrifices. My own magic required
neither.

Unlimited power
flowed through Lucid
Light as I reached
beyond the academy
and seized the lava-
filled sky.

With one immense
spell, I cast Meltronome away
and broke his molten
prison around the world.

Sunlight
flooded the planet, and Apollo rose
through the open sky like
the sun itself.

He declared himself the world's new supreme god. I could only hope
his reign would be kinder.

My mission
ended—but
the Doorman, Autumn, and
the dimensional
elevator still
waited beyond
my missing
memories.

