

THE GLIMMER PRISON

AUGUST 12, 2026.

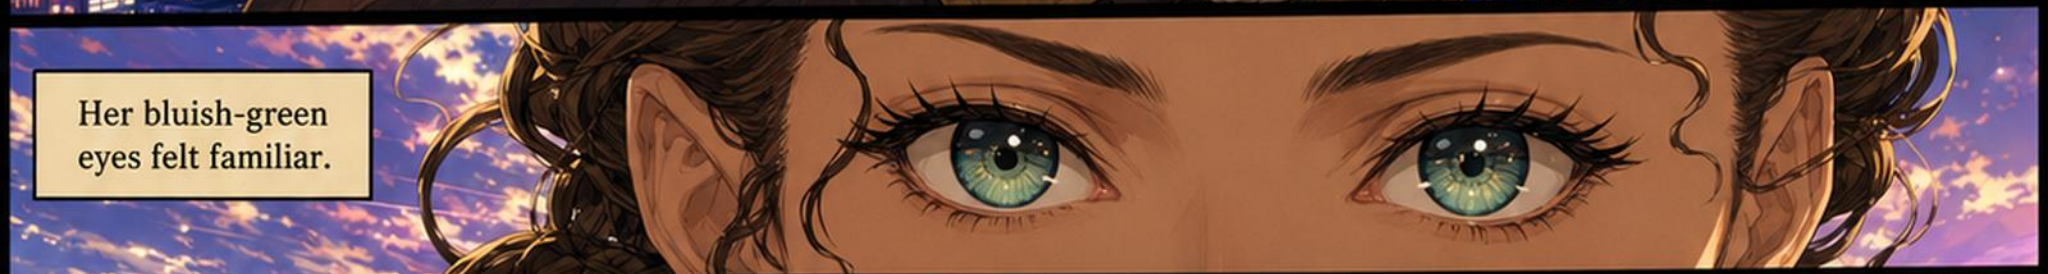

While flying through the sky, I met a woman who seemed to come from another time.

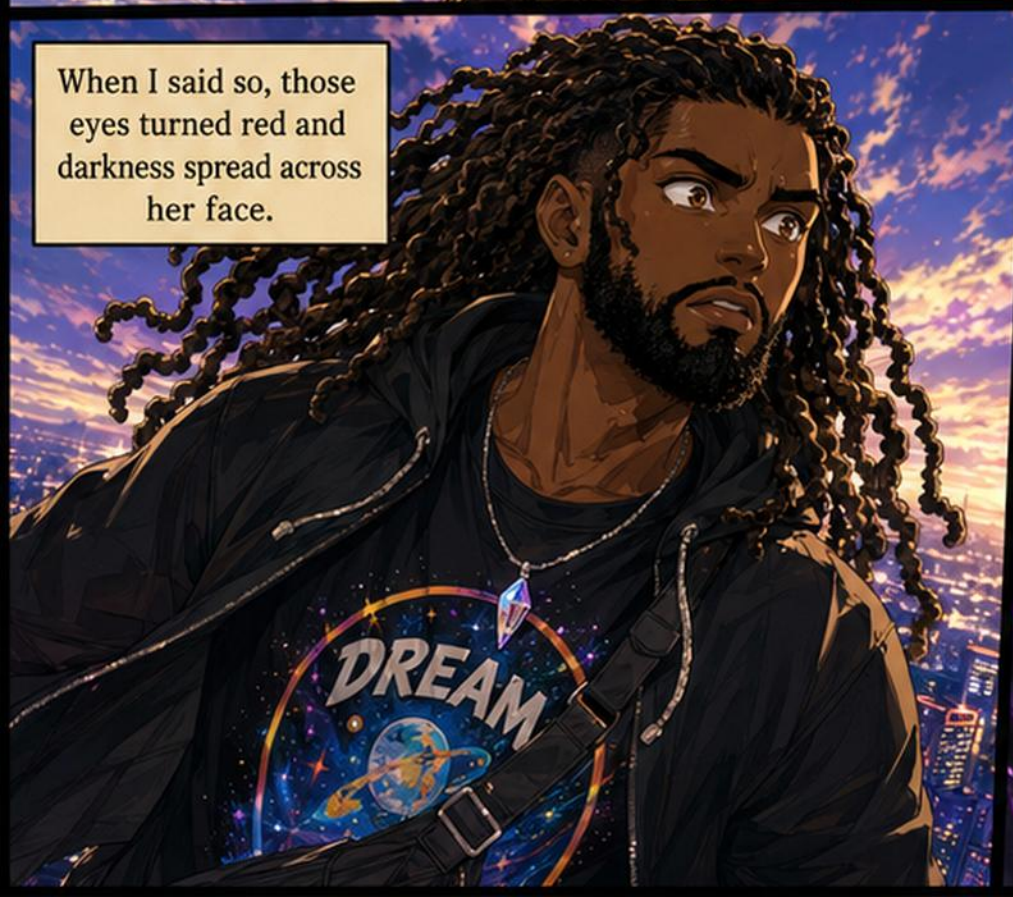

Her braided hair and mustard jacket belonged to the 1940s or 1950s—but she was flying.

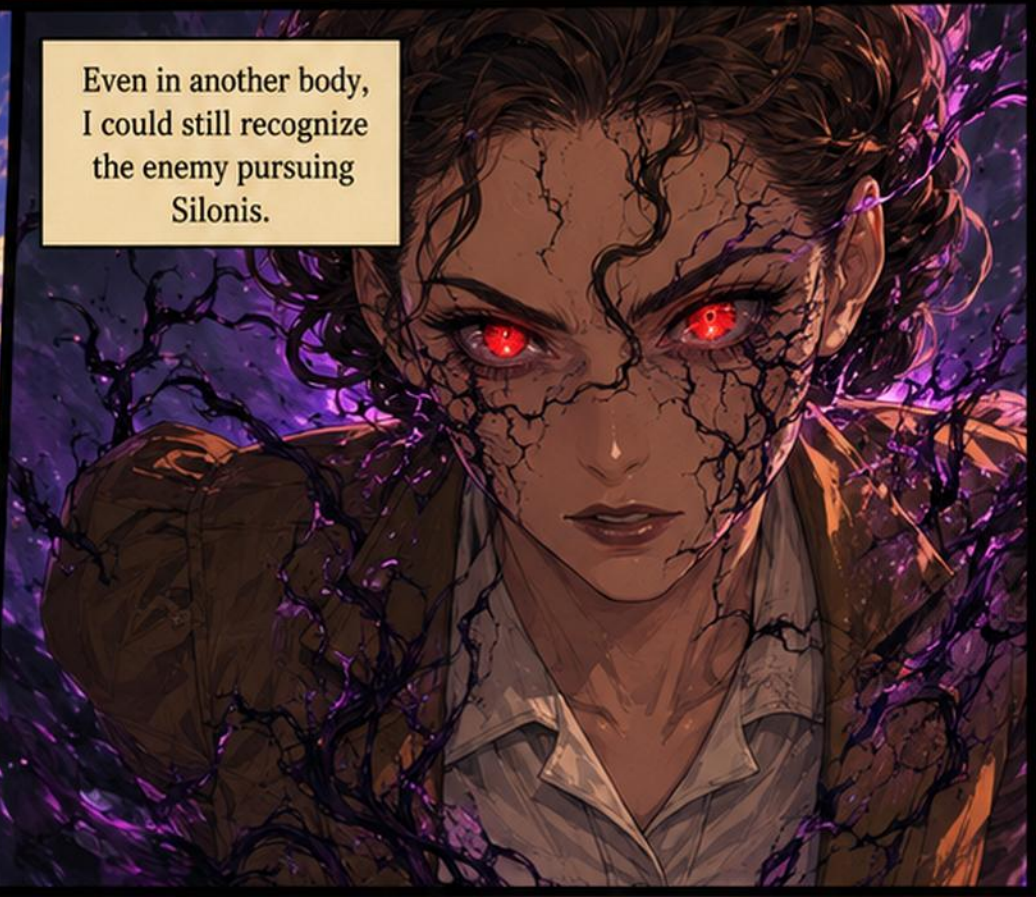

Her bluish-green eyes felt familiar.

When I said so, those eyes turned red and darkness spread across her face.

Even in another body, I could still recognize the enemy pursuing Silonis.

I fused Silonis with myself until the Sword of Life and I became one rainbow-crystal being.

I told the darkness it could never take a sword that was no longer separate from me.

It called me a fool.

Possession was its greatest power, and I had placed the prize inside the body it planned to steal.

The darkness abandoned the woman and leaped into me.

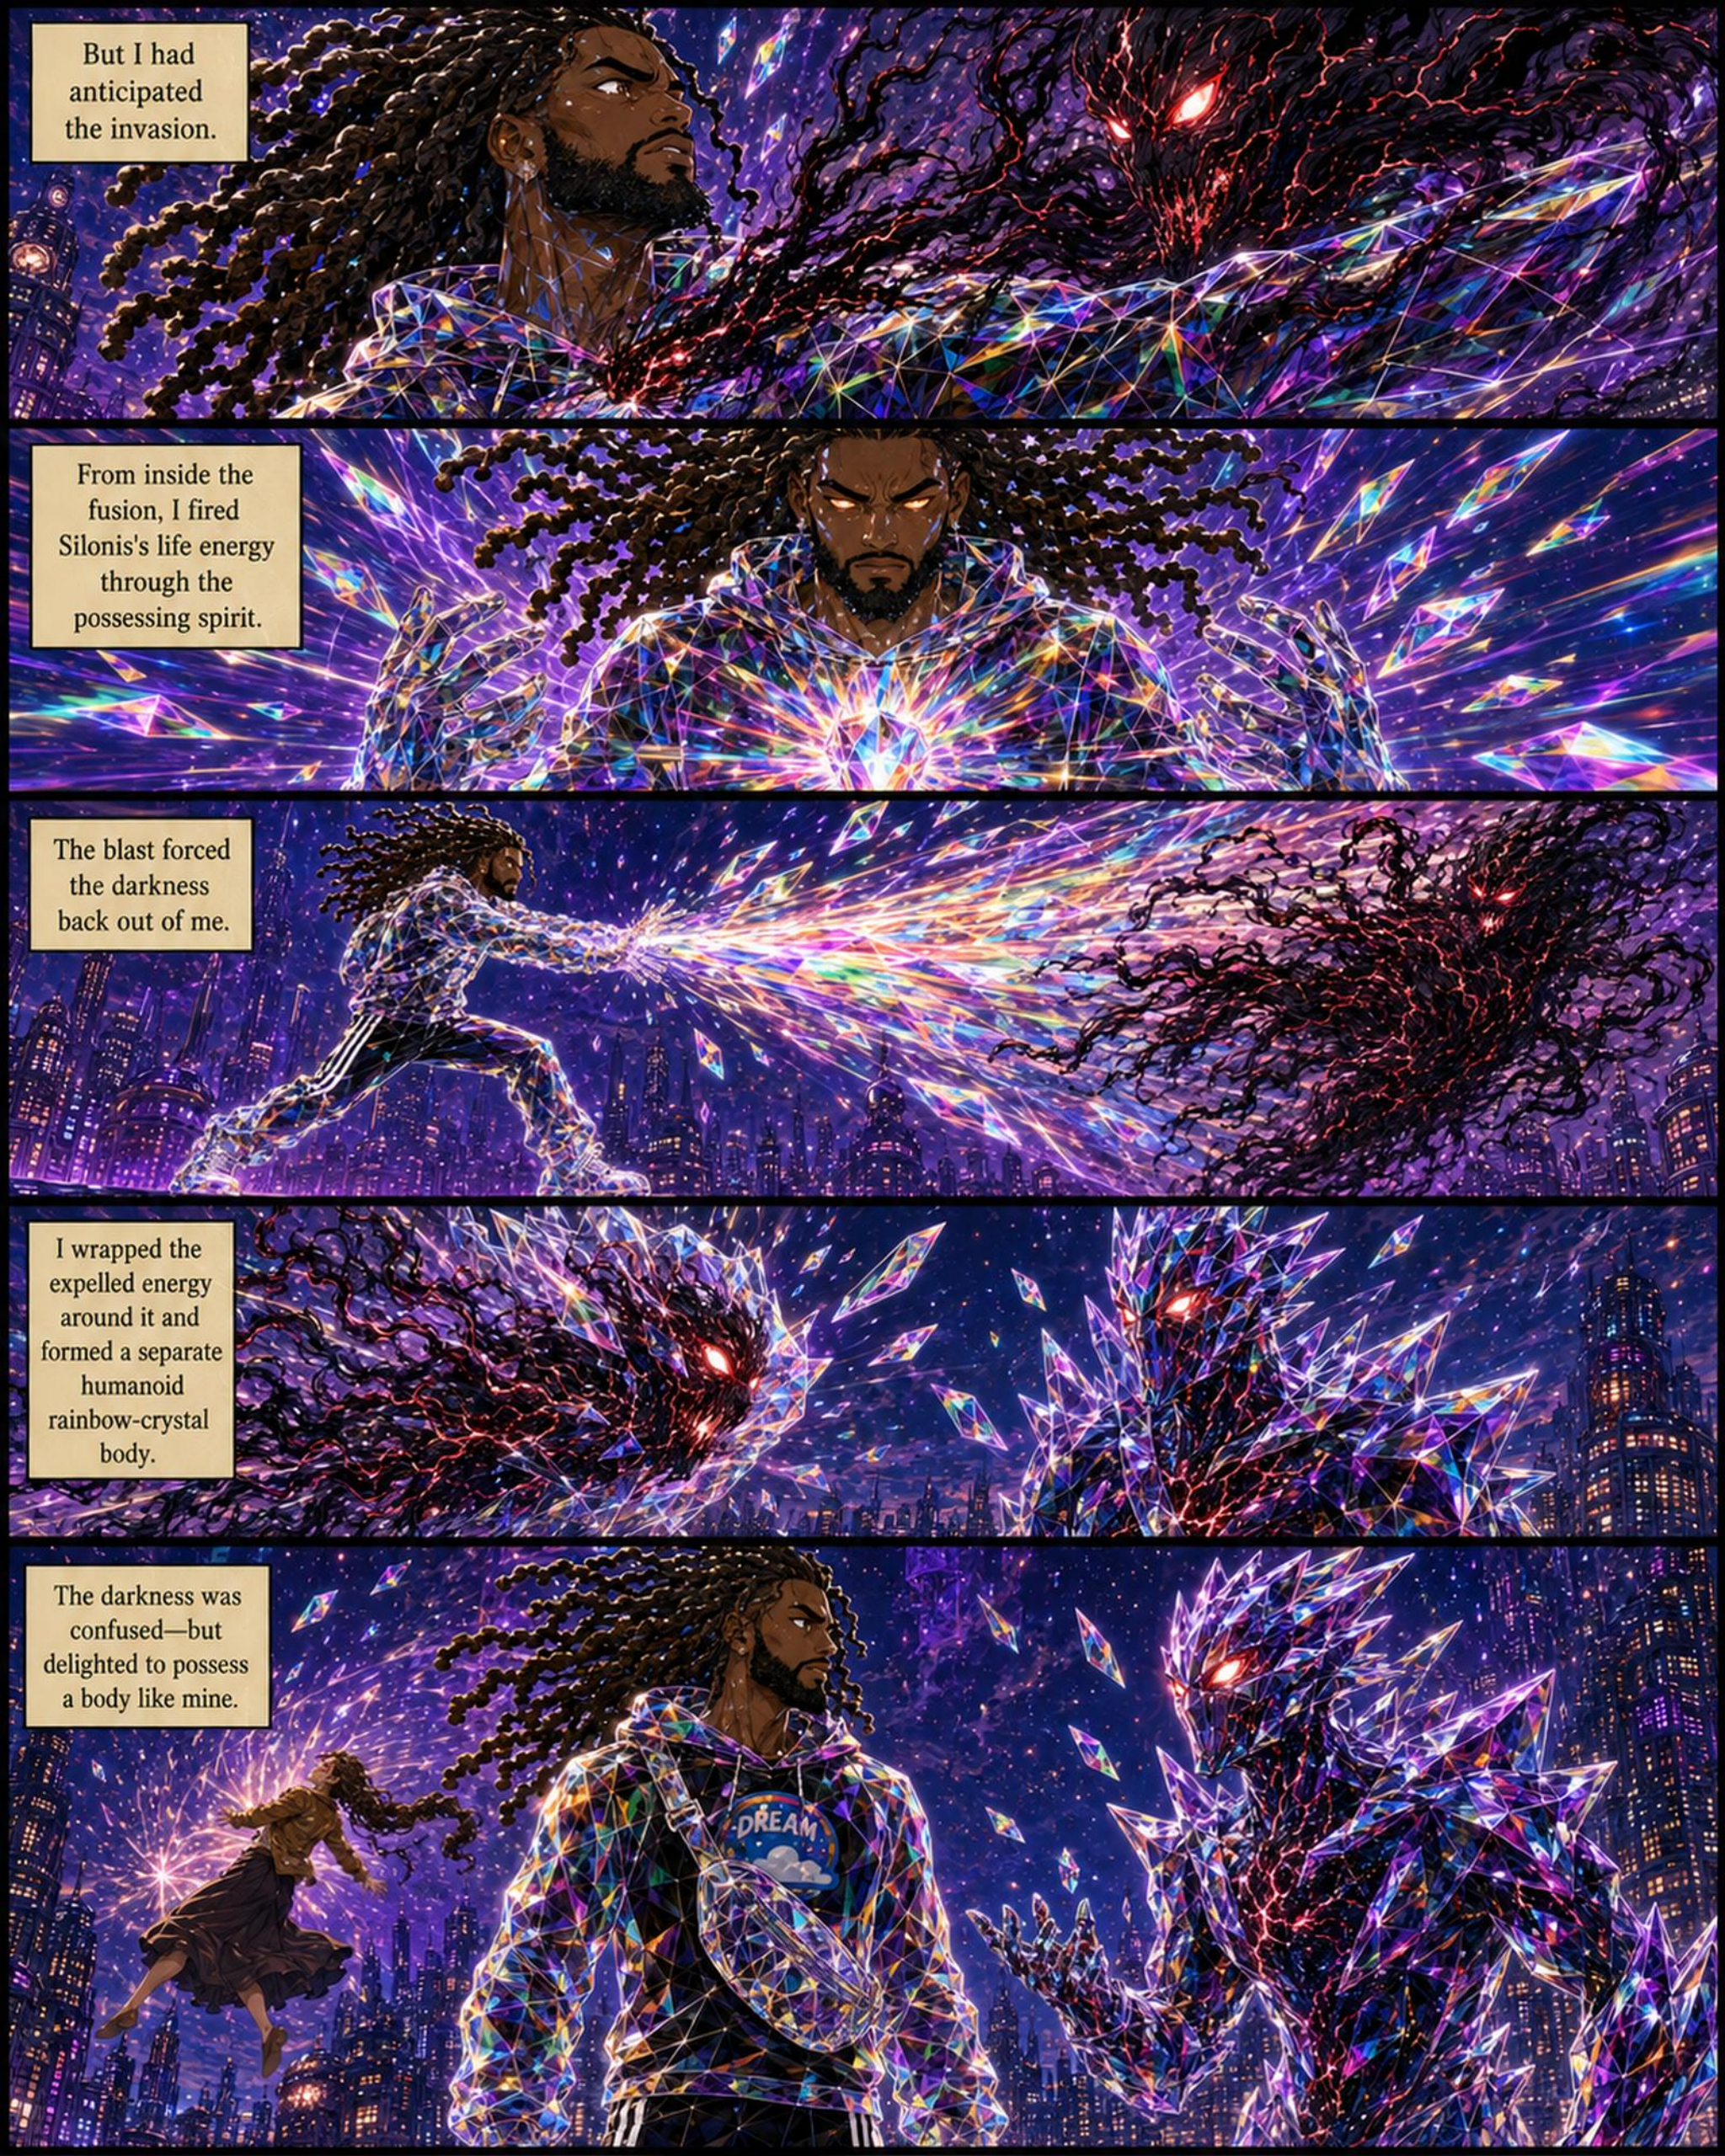

But I had anticipated the invasion.

From inside the fusion, I fired Silonis's life energy through the possessing spirit.

The blast forced the darkness back out of me.

I wrapped the expelled energy around it and formed a separate humanoid rainbow-crystal body.

The darkness was confused—but delighted to possess a body like mine.

I waited to learn
what the darkness
truly wanted.

It poured life energy into the city.

Towers bent like giants. Windows
opened as eyes.
Streets shook
beneath living walls.

The animated buildings rampaged
through the city
and attacked the people below.

Its first choice with
the power of life
was mass destruction.

The darkness
already used
people as homes
for itself.

It believed
buildings deserved
lives of their own—
and that human beings were disposable.

Homes would become the lives
that mattered.
People would become expendable
objects.

I had given it
freedom to reveal
its purpose.

Now I knew I could not let that purpose continue.

I siphoned the stolen life energy from its crystal construct.

Soon, only the darkness's bodiless soul remained in my hand.

The knowledge of a prison dimension called the Glimmer appeared in my mind.

I opened a Porta portal and cast the spirit into that ghostly realm.

With no physical bodies inside the Glimmer, there would be nothing for it to possess.

The living buildings were still attacking the city.

While fused with Silonis, I drew the life energy out of them and ended their rampage.

Then I returned that energy to the injured people, healing everyone the buildings had harmed.

The abandoned crystal body might remain as a dangerous loose thread.

But I had learned that fusion with Silonis could turn possession itself against the possessor.
