

07/11/2026:
Star Feast and Minicube Paradise

I induced lucidity through sleep paralysis and arrived alone on a quiet beach.

My energy felt low, so I decided to feast as a god would.

I flew into space and found a lifeless star system where nothing could be harmed.

I consumed the star's power and became a flaming, giant, cosmic god.

Then I kicked the flameless star across the universe like a soccer ball.

The flameless star
flew beyond the
observable universe
and entered the
land beyond.

I chased it through
the darkness until
color suddenly
surrounded me.

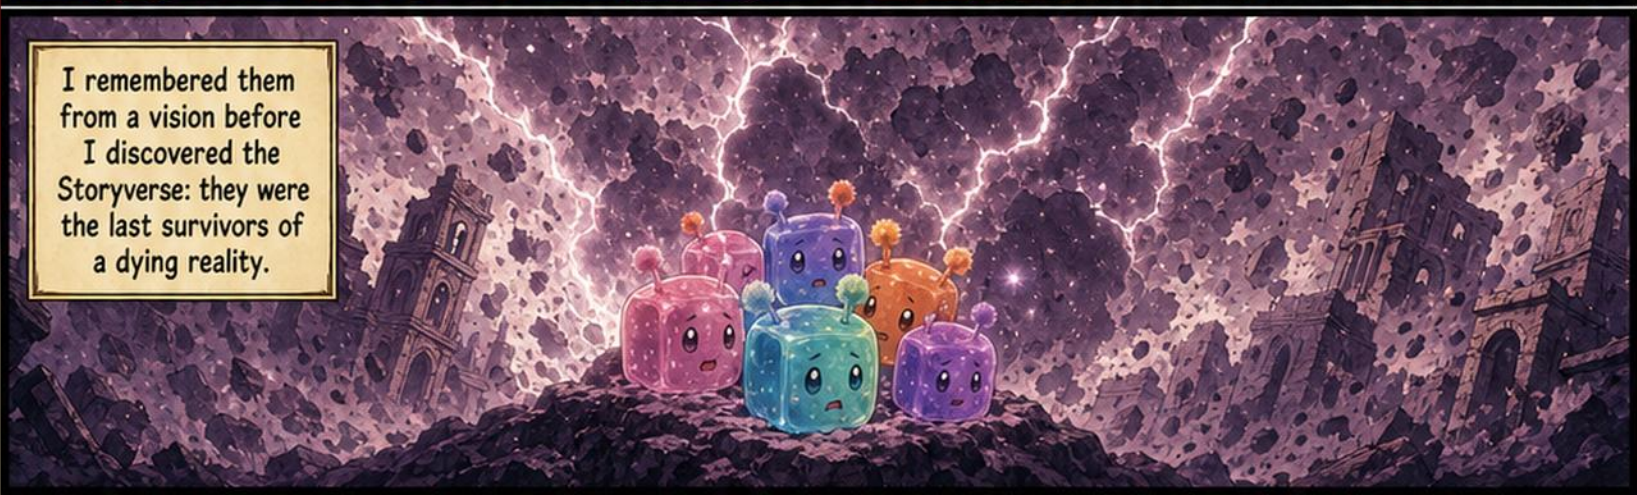

I had entered an
endless amalgamation
of living jelly cubes.

These were Minicubes,
colorful beings with
fuzzy antennae.

I remembered them
from a vision before
I discovered the Storyverse: they were
the last survivors of
a dying reality.

I felt sorry that the Minicubes had survived without any world to call home.

With Lucid Light, I created a grassy paradise for them inside the Storyverse.

Green hills, flowers, clear streams, and a bright sky unfolded beneath them.

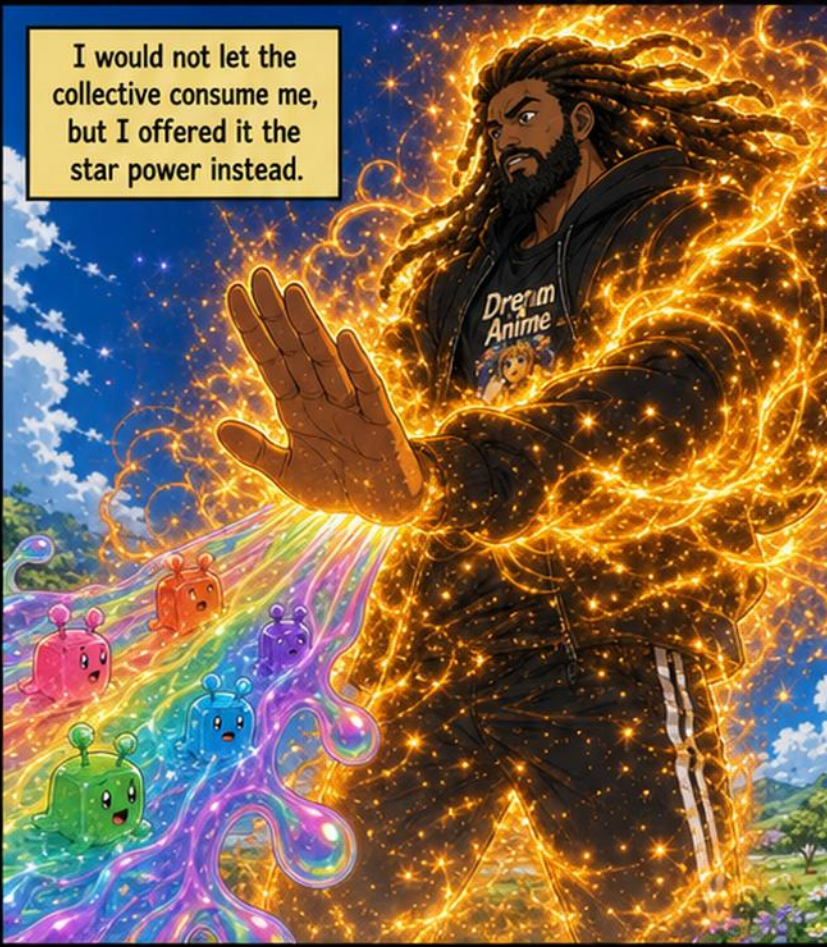

The Minicubes were grateful for their beautiful new home.

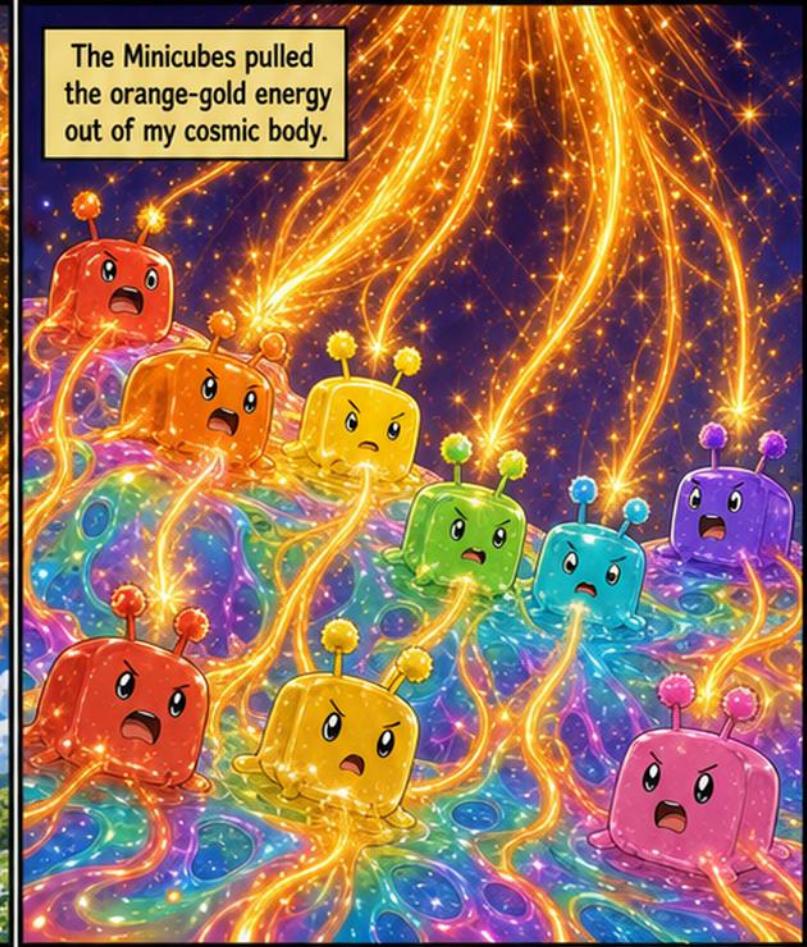

They tried to thank me by covering me in slime and assimilating me into their collective.

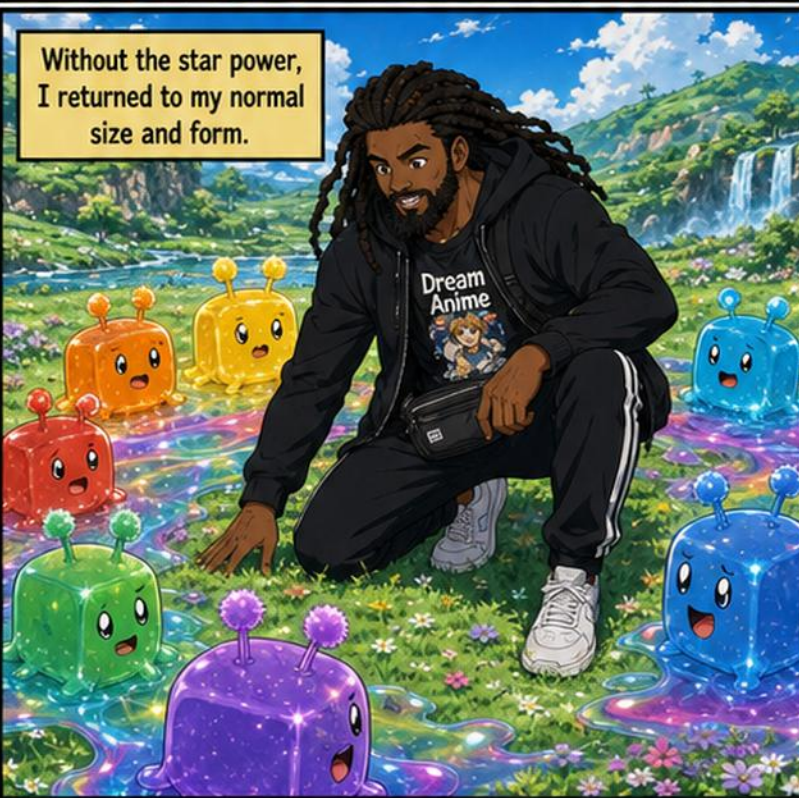

I would not let the collective consume me, but I offered it the star power instead.

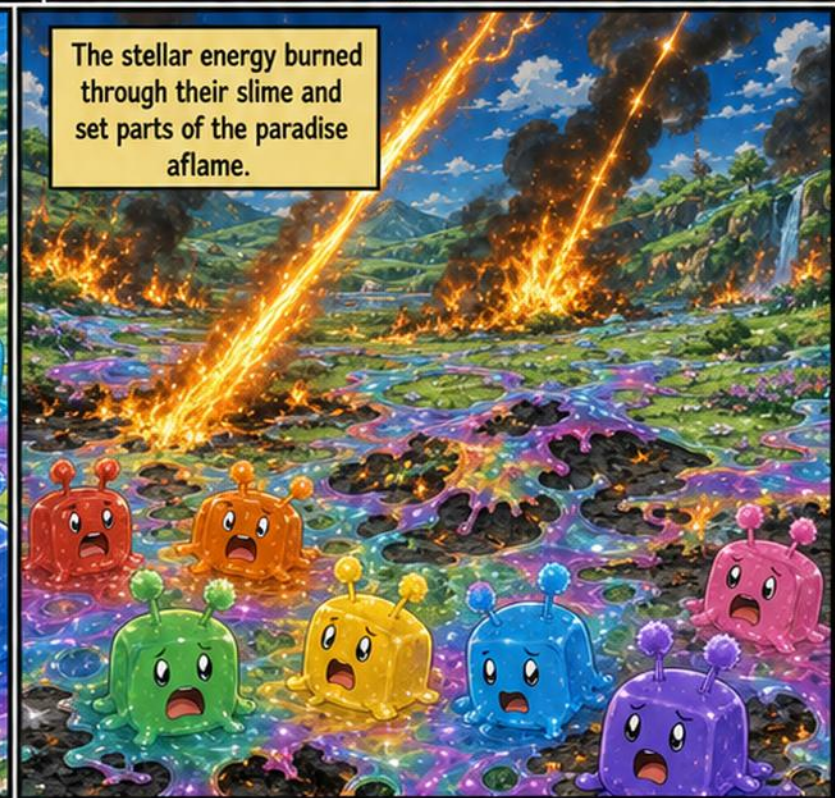

The Minicubes pulled the orange-gold energy out of my cosmic body.

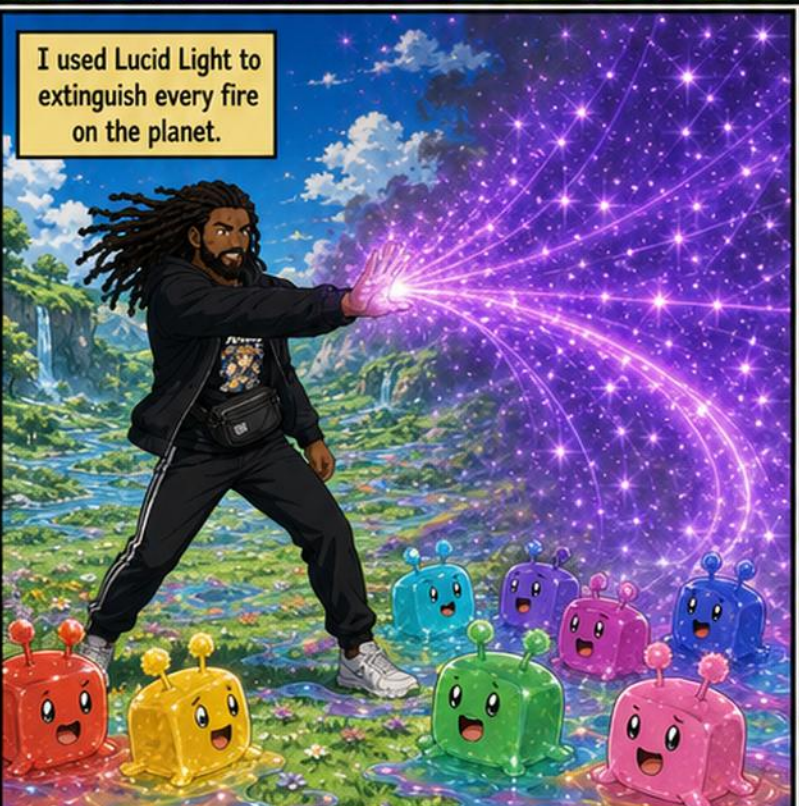

Without the star power, I returned to my normal size and form.

The stellar energy burned through their slime and set parts of the paradise aflame.

I used Lucid Light to extinguish every fire on the planet.

The Minicubes survived, but their slime had begun assimilating the world itself.

The assimilated planet came alive and chased me through Storyverse space.

A colorful slime tendril reached from the world and tried to pull me back.

I summoned a tiny portal with the Porta spell.

I returned to the beach just before the tendril could grab me.

The planet could not fit through the little portal, so I escaped.

Back on the beach,
I was safe—and
hungry all over again.

A nearby food shack
belonged to a chef with
a giant tortilla chip
for a head.

He welcomed me and
mixed one of the best
shakes I had ever tasted.

Then he served tender
meat glazed with
spicy honey.

This feast restored
me without stars,
slime, or cosmic danger.

I ate the shake
and spicy-honey
dishes to my heart's content.

The strange chef
kept the food coming
until my strength
returned.

After crossing the
universe for power,
a simple meal finally
satisfied me.

I relaxed beside
the ocean, full, safe,
and happy to let the
dream become quiet.
