

MIND NETWORK

Sleep paralysis opened the lucid gate, and Skelebot was already beside me.

A red mummy zombie woman stood before us, trapped inside an ancient curse.

I raised my rainbow crystal sword and focused every color into healing light.

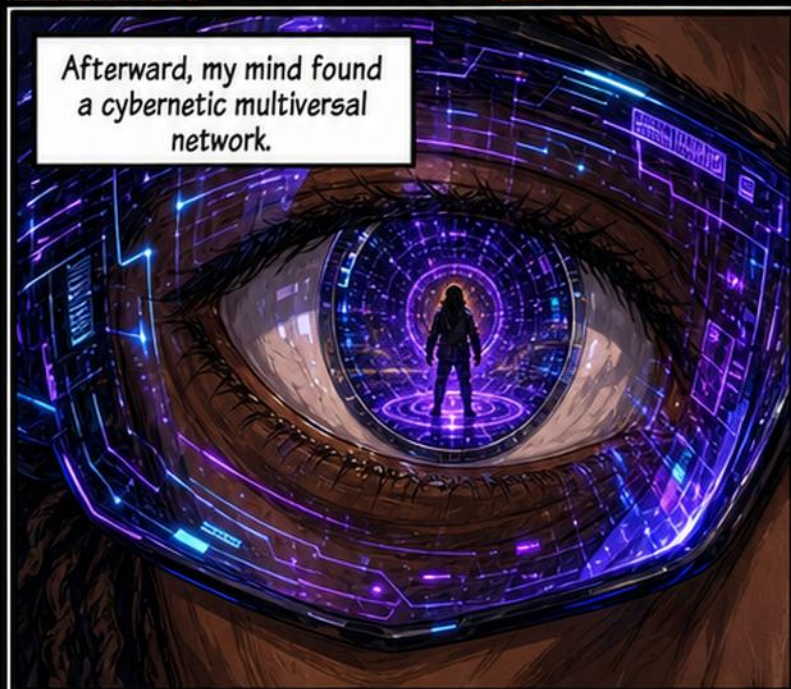

The curse broke clearly: the mummy became a beautiful restored pharaoh.

That healing was only the opening.

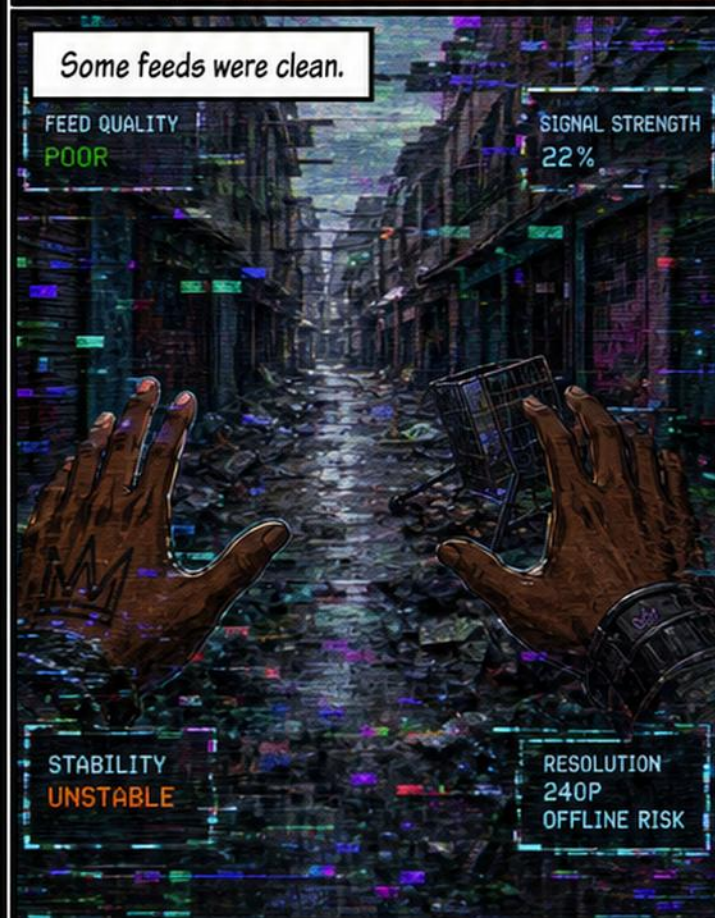

Afterward, my mind found a cybernetic multiversal network.

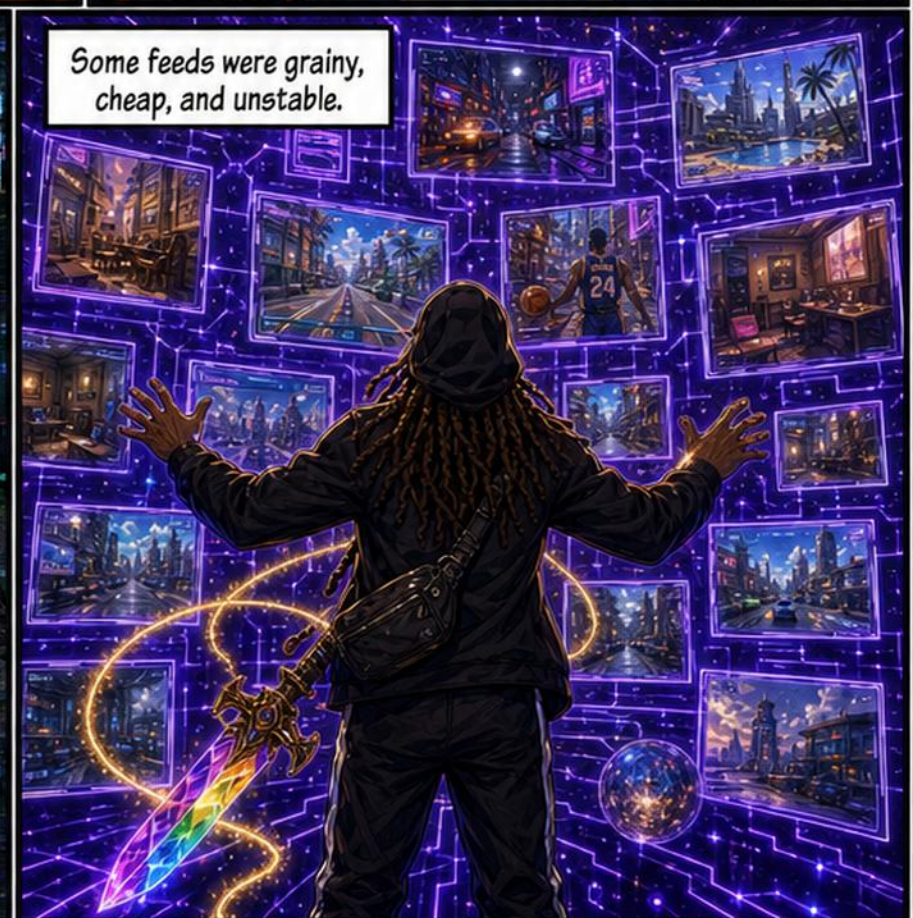

Each channel was a first-person life I could switch into.

Some feeds were clean.

Some feeds were grainy, cheap, and unstable.

I moved through
variant after variant,
faster than a normal
dream could explain.

In one life,
I was homeless
but still watched
by wealth.

A rich family
gave that version
of me money.

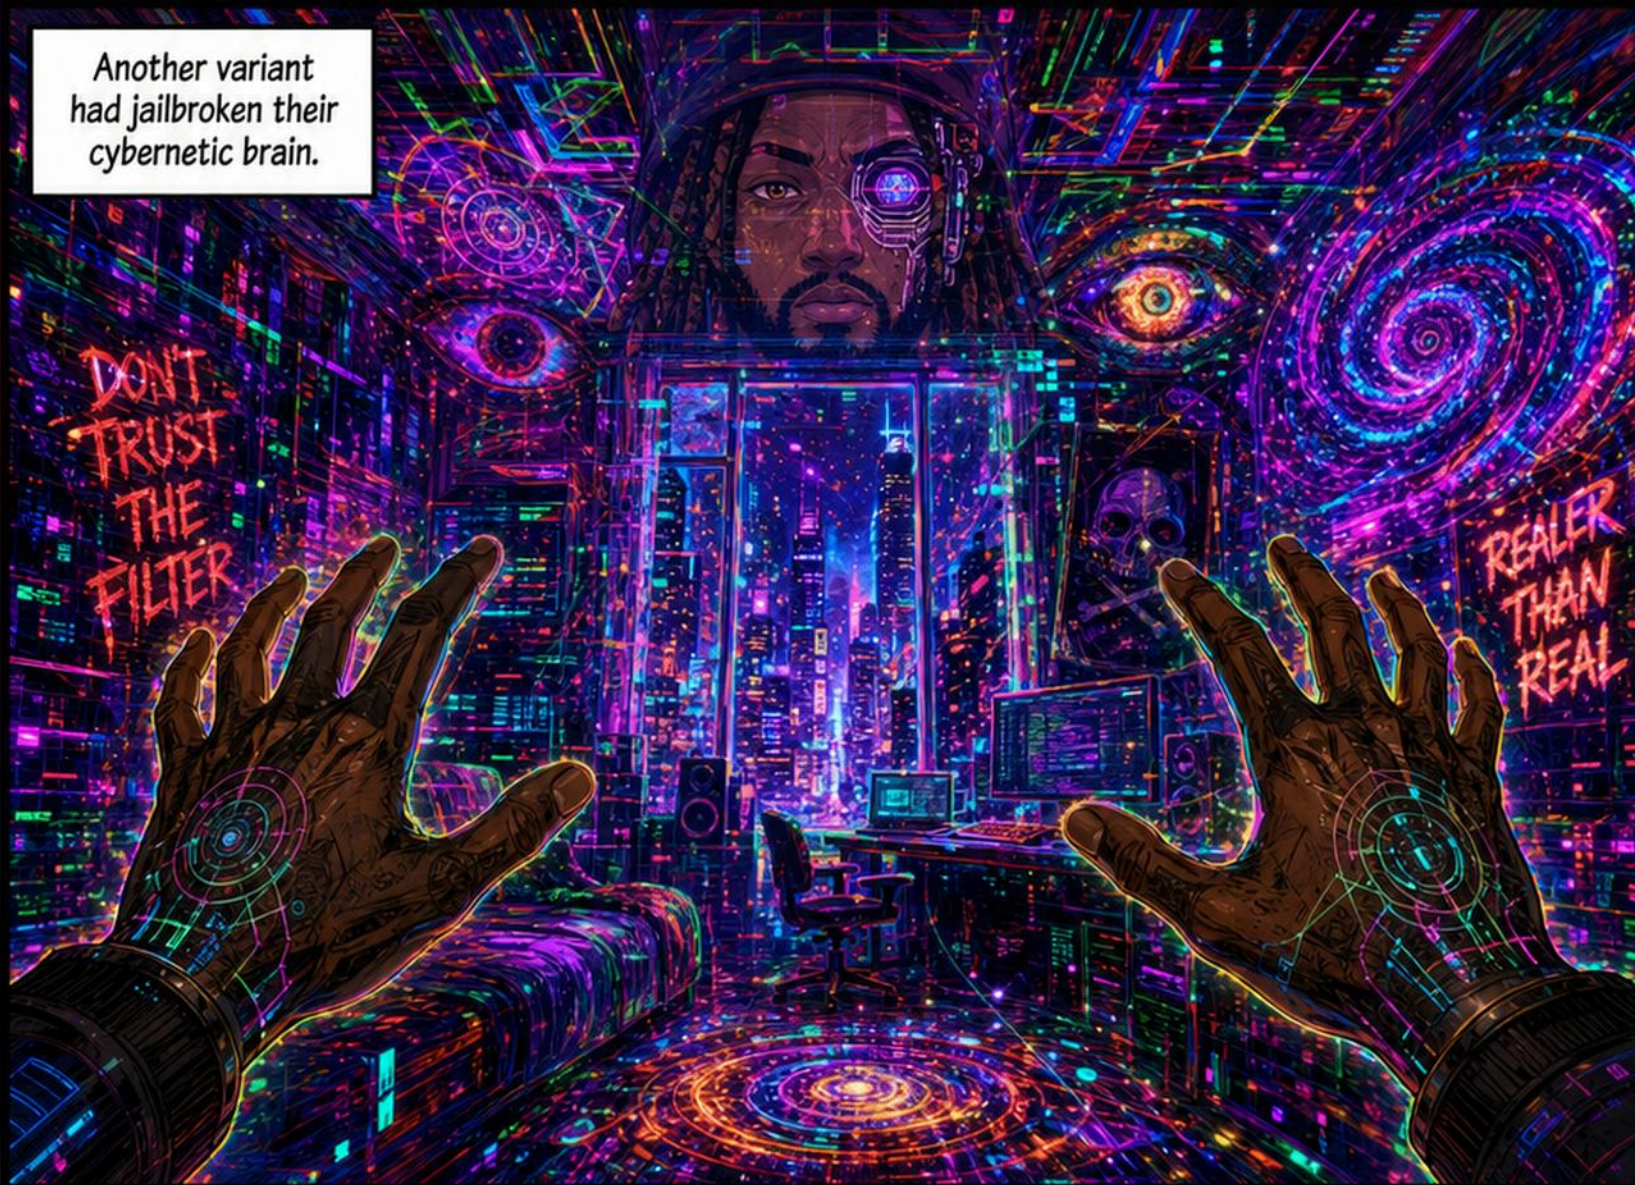

The condition
was cruel and
simple.

He could never
live anywhere
permanently.

Another variant
had jailbroken their
cybernetic brain.

The system produced
constant psychedelic
effects.

It was disorienting,
overloaded, and
hard to trust.

But strangely,
that feed felt
the most real.

For a moment, I wondered if the
network might
actually exist.

Across many channels,
one pattern kept returning.

Different variants played
the same trick-taking game.

The cards looked
like solitaire cards.

The rules were
only five steps.

Play a card, win
the trick, release
the magic.

Every card produced
a visible attack.

Sometimes I forgot I was channel surfing.

CHANNEL: 7421.A
FIRST-PERSON FEED
VARIANT: JET-7421.A
LOCATION: NEO-CITY SECTOR 9

CYBERNETIC LINK
STABILITY: 62%
LUCIDITY: 16%
EMOTION SYNC: HIGH

MISSION: SURVIVE
CASH: $23.17
ENERGY: LOW

I became the variant and accepted that life as normal.

Then lucidity snapped back.

I pulled away and studied the system again.

The network was infinite, but it was not random.

I did not solve
the network before
the dream moved on.

But I remembered
the clearest facts.

Infinite variants
could be piloted
through cybernetic
minds.

A five-rule
card game
appeared again
and again.

And the most
broken feed felt
the most real.
I wonder if I will
find it again.

